

It's your right to work in the community. You can find a job, change jobs, and build a career.

All people have the right to pursue work at a job they choose that matches their skills and interests.

You can try out different jobs. You can choose what kind of job you do, one that you like and are good at.

Like everyone else, people with disabilities should be able to get the support they need to work.

You can ask for the help you need to find a job and be successful. If you have a waiver, it can pay for on-the-job supports.

People with disabilities can do real work for real pay.

You can work in the same places as people without disabilities, and get paid the same amount as people without disabilities who do the same work.

Public benefits support work.

Disability benefit programs have special rules, called work incentives, that let you keep your health coverage, have more money, and keep your benefits if you need them while working.

Work can help you:

- ✓ Have more money
- ✓ Increase your confidence
- ✓ Learn new skills
- ✓ Meet and connect with new people
- ✓ Be more independent
- ✓ Build a better life

No matter where you are on your path to work, there are supports to help.
